

BULLSEYE CHIPPING GOLF GAME

RULES & CONDITIONS

Benefits of Playing 'Bullseye'

If you're like most golfers, then your short game is great in practice but falls apart under pressure, when it really matters - in competition.

This is largely due to being more comfortable and more relaxed when there is no pressure.

This 'Bullseye' Chipping Golf Game is designed to introduce CONSEQUENCE to each short game shot.

Equipment:

Practice Green

All of your golf clubs, except your putter

3 golf balls

Some tall tees - 3 different colours (optional)

The Set Up

Setup:

Push the golf tees into the green, creating 3 target circles around the flagstick. Use tees of 1 colour for the inner circle, 3 feet from the cup. The 2nd set of coloured tees should make up a circle 6 feet from the flag. The final colour is for the largest target, with a radius of 9 feet (3 yards) from the cup.

The size of these targets can be adjusted, based on your skill level.

Take your 3 golf balls and stand somewhere on the practice green. Toss the golf balls in different directions, to 3 different spots, from which you will chip and pitch.

This will allow your golf balls to roll into typical situations more naturally, rather than being placed.

Variety of Challenges

Attempt to roll your golf balls into a variety of different positions. The lies should be mixed, with some balls in the rough, some on the short grass and some in or near a bunker.

This challenges your versatility and imagination to produce different short game shots.

The majority of short game practice is performed from flat, perfect lies. In reality, these shots are in the minority on the golf course.

Quite often, you might find your golf ball in a bad lie, with the ball sitting 'down' or with no grass underneath the golf ball.

For a complete and comprehensive test of your short game, the levels of difficulty should also be varied.

With the 3 locations around the green, try to set up an easy chip like this one, a shot of medium difficulty and a very challenging position.

No preferred lies. Each shot must be played as it lies.

During a round of golf, you wouldn't want to find your golf ball short-sided, in a sandy lie and behind a bunker. By challenging yourself with these types of shots in practice, you will learn to relish the challenges thrown at you on the golf course!

Within reason, the levels of difficulty should reflect your current golfing standard.

The Game

Beginning with the easier position, choose your club with which to chip. Go through your full pre-shot routine, as if you were competing in a tournament. It's always a good idea to visualise your landing point before hitting the shot. This is a chipping and pitching challenge so, no putting!

Play your first chip, attempting to chip the ball in the hole. After all, this should be your goal. From this easy position, you score a point if your golf ball comes to rest inside the inner circle, within 3 feet of the flagstick. Score a bonus point if you succeed in chipping the ball into the hole. There are no re-takes, every shot counts!

Next, take your clubs to the shot of medium difficulty. Go through your normal routine again. Your target is still to chip your ball into the hole, for that bonus point. This time, a point is awarded if your ball comes to rest inside the middle circle, within 6 feet (2 yards) of the cup. Keep a tally of your score as you go.

From the 'tough' lie, you can score a point if your ball finishes within 9 feet (3 yards) of the pin. Retrieve your 3 golf balls and repeat twice more. After 9 shots, choose 1 more place from which to chip. Glen chose a shot he muffed for redemption! 😬 Not counting the possibility of chipping in, you now have a score out of 10. The most important aspect of this game is to record your score, so that you can challenge yourself to improve and build confidence.
